

GenevaLogic

ACTIVE TEACHING SYSTEMS

June 12, 2008

Dear Customer,

I am pleased to inform you that GenevaLogic has been acquired by Danware A/S, manufacturer of the Netop family of remote control and classroom management products. The two companies, when combined, will be the worldwide market share leader in classroom management software. A new division will be formed called Netop Education, which will focus exclusively on the needs of educators.

This is good news for educators and other customers who have relied on GenevaLogic's products, such as the industry-leading Vision6 classroom management software, to make teaching with technology easier. The combination of the two companies will make more development resources available for enhancing our classroom management software offering, and will enable us to offer you more and better solutions for teaching effectively with technology.

Please continue to work with your existing GenevaLogic reseller or distributor for all your sales and support needs. There are no changes planned in pricing or terms, and you can expect regular updates of Vision6 and our other products to continue.

We will have some exciting announcements to share with you later this year about additions to our family of classroom management software, and look forward to the opportunity this provides to strengthen our portfolio of solutions for teaching with technology.

Should you have any questions or concerns, please don't hesitate to contact your local GenevaLogic reseller or distributor.

Sincerely,

Kirk Greiner
CEO - GenevaLogic
